Akira Shinkai is the chief of a suburban police station and is on the path to success. That is, until one incident leads to a demotion.

Shinkai is shuttled off to the "Investigation Validation Section" of the Metropolitan Police Department. This Section is supposed to help prevent false accusations from reaching the courts by re-examining all the evidence, but instead it is stuck in paperwork and red tape. The Section is full of all kinds of odd characters that have lost their motivation.

Despite all this, Akira decides to take matters into her own hands: she re-examines cases by looking for questionable details in the reports and changing the vantage point. She begins to find the hidden truths. If she can not, she will keep going until she does, no matter if it brings tragedy or exposes the ugliness of the human heart.

And slowly, the other members of her Section begin to change. Akira's desire to serve justice and her drive to succeed do not go unnoticed.
